How can we create greater understanding and empathy in isolated white communities through exposure to people of color to enhance their knowledge about other racial realities?

FRI 12:32 AM

Let's stop with all these excuses as to why certain people rise above others. People who work hard will succeed no matter what. I never received preferential treatment on anything because I'm a Caucasian. I get stopped by police on random checks as much as any other minority. I show respect to the police officer and have always been accorded proper respect back.

"Let's Talk About White Privilege"

THU 1:14 PM

Max this is bogus; a term coined by liberal academics and media people. You are helping to stoke racial tensions.

SUN 7:25 PM

You very well might be right, but I'd need for you to elaborate on why you think that having conversations about race and identity is helping to stroke racial tension.

MON 1:45 PM

It is not important enough for me to comment on. boring

"Let's Talk About White Privilege"

THU 12:25 PM

There is no such thing as White privilege. America is a Meritocracy.

Quotes from target audience

“I’m not one for intermarriages because who would want that kid?”

“Some of them do look like thugs by the way that they dress, It’s wrong to look that way.”

“Allot of the shootings that happen is because the way that they act and dress.”

“I don’t refer to myself as a racist.”

I think the question has more to do with social class than race. I recall Affirmative Action in the late 1960s.

What question is that? Gentrification notwithstanding, if it's more about class, then why do poor working class whites and poor working class blacks still tend to live in separate neighborhoods? Consider that race and class intersect, so how can one be certain which plays a bigger role in life outcomes? Perhaps I'm misinterpreting your statement, but I fail to see the correlation between AA and classism

Certainly race is a factor, I am suggesting that it is not the sole factor. Look up Bacon's Rebellion in 1676. He tried to unite the slaves (Black) and the indentured servants (white) to overthrow the dominant aristocracy. Unfortunately he died due to natural causes, but I think, hope, that had he lived, his rebellion would have succeeded.

Perhaps I'm misinterpreting your statement, but I fail to see the correlation between AA and classism unless you're implying that AA created an equal playing field for those belonging to a historically disadvantaged racial group. Whatever strides AA may have made, it did not eliminate the root cause of systemic racism nor does it negate the existence of white privilege.

Good attempt at deflection though.

I did concede that class plays a role but I don't think it trumps (pun intended) race. As far as Bacon, his efforts to "unite" blacks and whites was most likely motivated by self-interest or need for more manpower. Who's to say that he himself wasn't prejudiced? People are not having their water poisoned (Flint) or being murdered by police because they're poor. I appreciate the reading recommendations as they do pique my interest, but you appear to be minimizing heinous racial realities. And for the sake of my emotional health, I don't engage apologists. Good day sir.

Basketball 🏀 has always been a way to bring people together of different skin colors and social economical backgrounds. The love of the game has been a platform in order to bridge the gap between racial barriers while ensuring racial inclusion and growing cultural competence. Come join us on June 1 to not only celebrate the love of the game that we all share, yet the different skin colors that bring us together in which makes us all great. The address is Lexington Ave & East 130th Street, New York, NY 10037. We will be by the basketball 🏀 courts in the park. Come ready to ball.

"I don't normally see a lot of different races play together in Harlem. It starts with the fact that there is not enough white kids in Harlem. White kids might feel intimidated by them."

-Evan

"I think it helps that the game is not just a black, white or Spanish sport. No one is thinking that shouldn't pass to him because he's black or white. everyone is good."

-Evan

"I've learned from playing basketball my entire life not to judge. Someone may not look good but they turn out to be the best. The game of basketball like race is a lot more complex than you think."

-Jarard

"Being on a team required us to put aside our differences and become a team."

-Martha

"I feel like when it comes to basketball, it is one of the more inclusive games because there are 5 people on one team. If one hogs the ball you won't win."

-Ahad

"When I was at 110 street there was a mix of people which was interesting because I would learn where they came from, but it's different in harlem because it's almost sacred to the black community. they don't have good baseball or soccer fields, so being on the courts is the only time they would really shine."

-Evan

Notable Insights

Basketball breaks down social, and racial barriers that can transcend the game.

Because black people have been historically systematically oppressed in most facets of society. Basketball has become one of the few places that the black society feels that is “There’s”.

When I first got there I was immediately accepted with open arms with one of the people there asking me to join them because the hoop that I was shooting at had no net.
